

Platform access and acceptable use

Supplement to customer and provider terms | Original draft for review

Scope and terminology

These terms apply to the Homlle website and any application expressly identified by Homlle as part of the service. An account is the personal workspace assigned to an authorised user. A booking is an accepted request for an identified service; an offer is not yet a booking. A provider is an approved cleaner or beauty business/person engaged under the applicable provider agreement. Content includes reviews, messages, profile information and uploaded material. The legal entity and contact details are those in the completed customer/provider agreement.

These platform rules supplement rather than replace the service contract. They do not change who supplies the customer service, remove mandatory rights, or make a provider an independent contractor merely by naming them as such. Before launch, Homlle must approve a consistent contractual model across these documents, checkout, invoices and provider registration.

Registration and account controls

OWNER DECISION: confirm an account minimum age and eligibility rules; proposed starting policy is adult account holders only, with treatment recipients subject to the separate beauty policy. A business representative must have authority to act for the business. Each person must use their own credentials and keep profile information accurate. No sale, transfer or sharing of accounts is permitted. Approved substitutes receive their own access and checks.

Present the terms before registration and record affirmative acceptance, version and time. Send or provide a durable copy through the agreed channel. An application account does not confer permission to perform work; activation follows the separate verification decision. Homlle may request relevant evidence or a competence interview and should give a fair explanation and review route for refusal where lawful. No blanket right to reject without reasons is created here.

Report suspected compromise promptly through [SECURITY CONTACT]. Homlle may take proportionate protective measures, such as ending sessions and requiring recovery checks. Users must take reasonable care with credentials, but are not automatically responsible for every fraudulent action or a defect in Homlle's own security.

Booking offers and repeat services

Only suitable approved providers should receive offers. Explain the actual matching factors, service qualifications, areas and availability before making ranking claims. A provider may decline or ignore an unaccepted offer without an attendance penalty. Once an offer is accepted, the booking duties apply. The system must prevent double allocation and communicate which provider has been assigned.

Repeat bookings must identify frequency, dates, price and how to change a visit or end the series. A preferred provider is a preference unless continuity has been expressly guaranteed. If the provider becomes unavailable, offer a suitable replacement or another fair option. Specify whether cancellation affects one visit or future visits. Urgent matching does not authorise an undisclosed surcharge or a lower safety threshold. Document 07 explains the proposed weekly ranking; it must match actual implementation before use.

Availability and support

Homlle will use reasonable care to operate and maintain its platform. Internet services may be interrupted for maintenance, faults or circumstances outside reasonable control; no unconditional round-the-clock availability guarantee is made. Provide notice where practical and a functioning fallback for affected live bookings. Preserve accepted booking and payment records during recovery. An outage must not automatically be treated as a provider no-show or a customer cancellation.

Support contact and hours: [COMPLETE]. Emergency services, not an ordinary help inbox, should be used for immediate danger. Provide reasonable accessible ways to obtain help, receive terms and make complaints. Homlle should investigate reported defects and communicate material booking consequences; an outage clause is not an exclusion of liability for its own breach.

Acceptable use and content

Do not impersonate someone, fabricate credentials or reviews, upload malware, attempt unauthorised access, evade verification, scrape private records or deliberately overload the service. Do not publish threats, unlawful harassment, private documents or content that infringes another person's rights. Legitimate complaints, honest negative reviews and protected disclosures are not prohibited merely because they criticise Homlle.

Keep booking communications relevant and respectful. Homlle may review communications for disclosed support, safety or fraud purposes with appropriate access controls and a lawful basis; this is not permission for unrestricted surveillance. Confidentiality allows necessary professional advice, lawful reporting and information-rights requests. Do not conceal a platform booking or redirect its payment to evade an agreed fee. Any wider restriction on future off-platform work requires a separately reviewed, proportionate term; no general non-compete is imposed.

Intellectual property and licences

Homlle and its licensors retain rights in their software, branding and original materials. Users receive a limited permission to use the platform and supplied materials for authorised service purposes. Do not reproduce, distribute or commercially exploit them beyond that permission or rights provided by law. This does not transfer ownership of a provider's pre-existing professional knowledge or a customer's own content.

Users keep ownership of their uploads and grant Homlle only the non-exclusive permission needed to store, format and display them for the disclosed service purpose and lawful retention. Public reviews may be displayed while relevant under the retention and moderation policy. This licence does not authorise unrelated advertising use of private home photographs. Optional promotional use needs separate permission. Rights complaints should identify the content, basis and requested action through [CONTACT]; preserve a fair response and appeal process.

Restrictions, closure and notices

For any material account restriction, identify the affected functions, reason where lawful, start time, review/end date, existing-booking arrangements, access to records and appeal route. A serious safety concern may require immediate protection; a minor service concern should not automatically close an account. Do not continue recurring work that the restriction makes unsafe. Keep access to appropriate statements, contracts and dispute records through a secure alternative after login is removed.

Providers may stop seeking new offers; account closure and accepted bookings are addressed under the provider agreement. Customers may request closure through [CONTACT], with a clear explanation of outstanding bookings/refunds and lawful retention. Inactivity is a review trigger only after an approved period and reasonable notice; do not automatically copy a competitor's activity quota. Confirm the applicability of online-platform business-user rules before choosing notice periods or automatic limitations.

Give material changes clear advance notice and obtain agreement where required; silence is not treated as universal consent. Urgent lawful security changes may take effect sooner with an explanation where possible. Changes must not retrospectively rewrite accepted prices or rights. Notices use the verified contact/account channel, with a record and a fallback for delivery failures.

General provisions

Record agreed changes in writing while preserving any information or representation that the law makes binding. If a clause is unenforceable, retain the remainder only to the extent legally possible; do not rewrite an unfair clause solely for Homlle's benefit. Delay in enforcing a right does not automatically waive it. Any transfer of Homlle's contract must preserve customer rights and be notified as required. A beneficiary booking must identify any intended third-party enforcement rights in its schedule. Governing law and court access remain as stated in the reviewed main agreement.
